.....PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.....A Menace in Hair.

Vanity has exacted an awful penalty from a girl in Detroit. A case of leprosy, believed to have been contracted from imported hair, has been brought to the attention of the Board of Health of that city. If the report is authentic, other young women will think twice before augmenting their natural tresses with hair from dubious and unknown sources.

The recent passion of adorning the head with sundry braids and twists. Psyche knot, puffs, transformations, and what-not, has brought to bear such increased demands on the hair market that the dealers can not all afford to be scrupulous in her selection of material. Hair is brought from all parts of the world. India and Central Asia compete with the slums of Paris and London in the production of tresses to adorn the heads of American women. Unless the press reports are misleading, over in China they have formed the pleasant task of cutting of queues from the heads of dead Chinese coolies—who may have incurred the death heaven only knows how—and sending the hair to the American market.

The desire to look well and to be in fashion accompanies many women from the cradle to the grave, says an exchange. But what unusual forms it does take at times! Some of the puffs and braids that have inflicted themselves on the public within the past year or two have been bad enough in themselves. If they are hiding places for the germs of leprosy and other diseases from the Orient, they become not only amazing in shape, but most alarming in character.

A Short-Sighted Policy.

Specia's from: Southwestern Kentucky say quail are dying in large numbers in consequence of the severe weather, says the Courier-Journal. There has been an unusual amount of snow during the winter and the birds are starving or freezing to death because of their inability to obtain food in sufficient quantities to maintain life. Similar reports have come heretofore from different localities in the State.

Representative Clay introduced a bill in the Legislature some time ago for the appointment of a State Game Warden. The bill came to a vote in the House last week and was defeated. The majority against it was so decisive that there appears to be small hope of the enactment of any similar measure at the present session. It is to be regretted that the State's representatives in the General Assembly do not realize the advisability of some adequate measure for the protection of fish and game.

Kentucky is one of a small minority of states where no action has been taken toward State supervision of these matters. In some of these states the need of such a policy is less pressing than in Kentucky, their supply of fish and game being more abundant. Under a system of conservation such as has been adopted elsewhere quail and small game would not be starving or perishing from cold. One of the duties of a game warden is to guard against such contingencies. Some of our neighboring states, which have departed from the ancient and outgrown methods that still prevail in Kentucky, have systematic arrangements which make possible prompt relief for quail and other birds in cases of emergency.

Kentuckians have been doing as they pleased in these matters so long that numbers of them are disposed to resent any effort at State supervision. This feeling was reflected in the action of the House last week on Mr. Clay's bill. That has been the experience in other states also, but once the conservation policy has been established it rapidly grows in popular favor. The Indiana Fish and Game Commissioner in a recent report asserted that he formerly found great difficulty in enforcing the law, but that such is not the case at present. In counties where his deputies used to take their lives in their hands when they undertook to prosecute offenders there now are large fish and game protective associations and hundreds of the best citizens are organized for the purpose of upholding the hands of the commissioner.

There is no doubt that a similar state of affairs could be brought about in Kentucky under a progressive and intelligent State policy. So long, however, as our legislative bodies do not recognize the wisdom of such action there is small hope of any departure from the destructive procedure to which we have been accustomed.

The Girl Everybody Likes.

She is not beautiful—oh, no! Nobody thinks of calling her that. Not one of a dozen can tell whether her eyes are black or blue. If you should ask them to describe her, they would only say, "She is just right," and there it would end. She is a merry-hearted, fun-loving, bewitching maiden, without a spark of envy or malice in her whole composition. She enjoys herself and wants everybody else to do the same. She has always a kind word and a pleasant smile for the "oldest man or woman; in fact I can think of nothing she resembles more than a sunbeam, which can brighten everything it comes in contact with. All pay her marked attention, from rich Mr. Watt who lives in a mansion on the hill, to negro Sam, the sweep. All look after her with an admiring eye, and say to themselves: "She is just the right sort of a girl."

Discrimination Against Kentucky By Beef Trust.

At the hearing before the committee which is investigating the prices of foodstuffs, Representative Ben Johnson Tuesday brought to light the injustice being done by the beef trust to the Kentucky and other cattle growers of the Southern States.

Mr. Johnson made Inspector Repp, of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, admit that the Northern packers discriminate in prices against all cattle producers south of the Ohio River. The admission was brought about as a result of a statement made by Inspector Repp that 1,000 pound steers were not selling at the principal stock yards in this country for $6.50 per hundredweight.

Mr. Johnson produced a Louisville paper herein it is stated that the highest-priced steer on the Louisville market last Saturday brought only $35.40, while the average 1,000 pound steer sold for much less. Upon being confronted with this, Inspector Repp then stated in substance, that the packers would not pay as much for a Kentucky steer as they would for an Indiana steer, notwithstanding the fact that the Kentucky steer might be just as good in every respect.

Being pressed by Mr. Johnson, he finally admitted that it was nothing more and nothing less than a discrimination upon the part of the packers against every steer put upon the market which has been raised South of the Ohio River.
